

A Violent Nexus: Religious Fundamentalism, Exclusionary Nationalism, and the Taliban

Dr Niamatullah Ibrahim (Senior Lecturer in International Relations at La Trobe University).

Religious fundamentalism and nationalism are seemingly incompatible ideologies. The former seeks to transcend ethnic and national boundaries while the latter reflects the aspirations and interests of a particular national or ethnic community. Despite this, there is a growing trend of religiously nationalist movements across the world that combine nationalist fervour with an extremist interpretation of religion to inflict violence on members of other groups.
